

The Truth About Millennials and Money

Written by cathy@newsandexperts.com
Wednesday, 12 July 2017 15:45

Millennials aren't just choosing experiences over possessions; they are facing far greater economic challenges than previous generations.

On average their wages are 20% lower and they earn $10,000.00 less per year than their parents — but there's hope.

According to Wealth Manager David Rosell, as long as Millennials recognize and address the unique risks faced by their generation, they can safely and successfully meet their financial goals.

Some topics he can talk about are:

The Truth About Millennials and Money

Written by cathy@newsandexperts.com
Wednesday, 12 July 2017 15:45

South America.

He spent three weeks climbing the infamous peaks of the Nepalese Himalayas, has lived tall amongst the pigmies of Uganda, and was one of the privileged to partake in tearing down the Berlin Wall.

As a recipient of a Retirement Distribution Certificate from the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Business, David excels making complicated financial planning topics easy to understand.

He has been featured in two of the financial industry's leading publications, Financial Advisor and Financial Planning magazine, as well as on CNN Money, Chicago Tribune, US News & World Report, FOX Business, Yahoo! Finance and NPR.